How to Balance Warmth and Safety in the Car Seat

Making Sure Your Child is Warm and Safe

For infants:

- Dress the infant as if they were going to be indoors. A sweater or light jacket will be enough.
- When possible, warm the vehicle up in advance of taking the infant outside.
- Place the child securely in carrier of the rear-facing only car seat making sure the harness straps are snug (remember if you can pinch the webbing together between your thumb and forefinger the harness is too loose). Make sure the harness retainer clip is at armpit level.
- Cover the infant in the car seat with a blanket after securing the harness and then carry the infant out to the car.
- Aftermarket covers (fitted blankets) designed to provide warmth can be used only if approved by the manufacturer of your car seat. The approved covers have been tested with the car seat and it has been determined that it will not compromise your child's safety.
- As the car warms up you can remove blankets and then place them over the infant when you arrive at your destination.

For toddlers and preschoolers:

- Dress the child comfortably and put on their coat and hat for the walk out to the car.
- Take off the coat and buckle the child snugly in the harness.
- Slip the child's arm through the sleeves to wear the coat backwards or you can use blankets to cover the child.
- When purchasing winter coats, look for coats that provide warmth without bulk.
